M

At Marmelo, we have made it our mission to champion Portuguese wines, and to introduce our guests to a path less travelled.

Fortified wines are a centrepiece of Portugal's wine-making history and trade, and we are impassioned to showcase the multitude of Port styles from the Douro Valley as well as the extremely long-lived wines from the legendary island of Madeira.

Nowadays, Portuguese wines can confidently stand up against the finest wines of the world, with a focus on regionality, diversity of varieties and sustainability.

Marmelo's selection aims to make Iberian wines the protagonists of this list, celebrating both classic and more experimental, up-and-coming wine makers. This naturally flows into sections dedicated to Australian-grown Iberian varieties.

A strong Victorian representation comes full circle complemented by an extensive selection of our favourite classics from around the globe.

Our choices are driven by a few common denominators: excellence in wine making, diversity, sustainability, great stories and more than anything else, tasty wines.

We look forward to surprising you with something unique and unfamiliar.

MADEIRA

Madeira is a subtropical Atlantic Island off the coast of Morocco, with a long-standing wine-making history. It is famous for its fortified wines characterised by high levels of oxidation, and variable levels of sweetness. The best examples are incredibly complex and gastronomic and can easily outlive humans! Our selection is aimed at providing stylistic and varietal diversity and age depth.

PORT

Arguably the most famous Portuguese wine, and the most renowned fortified wine in the world. Port is produced in the Douro Valley, in the north of the country and is traditionally aged in the coastal city of Porto. Often regarded as a dessert wine, but this is rather reductive: we strive to prove how some examples pair wonderfully with savoury courses. Our concise selection represents most of the styles produced, with particular focus on the most sought after category: Vintage Port.
